CHAFIN ADVOCATES TAXING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC OUT OF BUSINESS

compliments enough to last the state and county a lifetime.

He is just back to the state for the first time since it voted "dry." Since then he has campaigned all over the Middle West and East, having gone from Chicago to Boston and back in an automobile, speaking from two to ten times each day on the trip going and coming, and in each of these 989 speeches he always referred to Arizona as "the greatest state in the Union." Great first because it is the only state in the Union that has a real prohibition law; great because it has more dry rivers in it than any other state; great because it has the greatest canyon of any state; great because it has the greatest petrified forest; great because you can look further without seeing anything than in any other state in the Union.

The speaker further declared that Arizona had accomplished more in its first three years of statehood than any other state in the Union had accomplished in fifty years—the first year woman's suffrage, and then at the next election a statewide prohibition law that really prohibits.

He paused long enough to give my friend, Judge Peter T. Robertson, the credit for drawing with his own pen both of these laws. And he declared that the prohibitory law as now existing in Arizona was about the easiest law on the statute books to enforce, pointing to the fact that after an all-day stay in Yuma he had not seen a citizen who even looked like he had taken a drink in a month of Sundays.

Mr. Chafin somewhat astonished his hearers by declaring that he is absolutely opposed to the attempt being made to amend the Federal Constitution, relating to the liquor question; but, instead of that, he nearly took their breath when he outlined the fight that is now being waged in Congress to put a stop to the liquor traffic. In this connection, Mr. Chafin had this to say:

"First: Prohibition for the District of Columbia, territories and all places over which the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction. The states have no jurisdiction over this matter, and it needs no amendment to the Constitution. I would like to ask Underwood, Mann & Company if this is a state or local question.

"Second: Prohibition for the liquor traffic the use of the mails in every form. The states have no jurisdiction in this case and it needs no amendment to the Constitution. I ask Underwood, Mann & Company if this is an interference with home rule.

"Third: Prohibit all importation and exportation of liquor. The states have nothing to do with this and it needs no amendment to the Constitution. Again, Underwood, Mann & Company, does this interfere with the sovereignty of the states?

"Fourth: Prohibit all interstate traffic in liquor under the power conferred by the interstate commerce clause of the federal Constitution. The states have no power over this matter and no amendment to the Constitution is needed. I again ask Underwood, Mann & Company if this is an interference with personal liberty?

"Fifth: Put a prohibitive tax of ten thousand dollars on every gallon of every kind of liquor made, except denatured alcohol. Leave the laws for collecting the tax just as they are now. Keep the same army of officers we now have and in the same manner send every man to the penitentiary who does not pay the tax. In this matter the offense consists—not in making the liquor, but in not paying the tax. That is the law now. The states punish them for making the liquor.

"The question of state and federal authority in this respect has been well defined and settled for more than fifty years. We need no amendment to the Constitution to pass this law. Indeed, if we had a real Prohibition amendment we could not invoke the power to tax, which always carries with it the power to destroy. Now, Underwood, Mann & Company, is this an interference with local self-government?

"After we get these five laws passed and enforced, I am in favor of leaving the rest of the job of killing the liquor traffic to the states, where it has always been. And then, if the traffic is not dead in 30 days, I am in favor of passing just enough more laws to kill it. For we will never have complete Prohibition in any state until the national government passes all five of the above laws."
